A student grievance is simply any situation occurring in the course of the school's operation, other than matters of a purely personal nature, which causes a student to consider himself aggrieved. Students should discuss their grievances informally with the person involved as the first step in grievance resolution. In each secondary school, guidance counselors and building administrators may assist with investigation of a complaint. The building principal will review and make a determination of the matter. Appeals of the building principal's decision to the Superintendent of Schools are the right and responsibility of the grievant. Similarly, the Superintendent's determination can be appealed to the Board of Education.

Reviewed January 2011
Renumbered from P5312 – September 2015